The Virginia Central Railway Trail was envisioned by the City of Fredericksburg, VA, as part of an initiative to provide the community with a connected network of trails for multimodal transportation. The trail offers links to various residential communities and businesses within the City, creating opportunities for recreation that did not previously exist as well as increased access to local history throughout the project area. The City's Pathways Steering Committee, a long-standing bicycling and pedestrian facilities planning group, continues to serve to identify user needs, promote safety, and foster the area's multimodal transportation network.
